While designing the Missile Community Cancer Study, or MCCS, researchers expanded the study to include a broad range of career fields that work in the missile fields. The change increases the statistical power of the study and includes people in other career fields who have similar exposures within the intercontinental ballistic missile community.

Working with Air Force Global Strike Command and 20th Air Force historians, the research team identified more than 100 current and historical Air Force Specialty Codes, or AFSCs, as being part of the larger missile community. Therefore, the research includes approximately 65,000 personnel in the missile community during the study timeframe.

This includes missile maintainers, technicians, facilities personnel, specific security forces and food services personnel, among others. Of the 65,000 in the missile community, approximately 6,800 personnel are identified as Missile Combat Crew or Missile Operations Staff Officers.

The final MCCS analysis will include a stratified risk assessment by job location, including this population of 6,800.
